This is a short story from April, a university girl whose night out with the girls turned into a "night of shame". April so wished that she hadn't done something in her bedroom that would see her drunk before the night had barely started. Then April, after only the first nightclub, is discarding her shoes for the evening and becoming involved in a drinking game with some boys. This leads to April losing more than just her shoes. Then there is the concrete post, what April does in the back of the taxi, and her dad to worry about. Enjoy reading about April's "night of shame"! There are some definite lessons in there for the young girl. 18+
